

Achmad Sukarsono

Senior Analyst, Global Risks Analysis Asia Pacific
Control Risks

Achmad Sukarsono is based in Control Risks' Singapore office and provides security and socio-political analysis on Indonesia, Malaysia and Brunei for Control Risks' online solutions, as well as more in-depth, bespoke consultancy support for corporate clients, ranging from oil and mining companies to tech and transport firms. Achmad was previously a London-based Asia analyst at political risk consultancy Eurasia Group where his work included assessments on the labour situation in Indonesia, mapping the alcohol debate in predominantly Muslim Indonesia and Malaysia for a food & beverage company and in-depth reports on the oil sector in Indonesia and Malaysia. Before joining the political risk industry, Achmad worked as a Southeast Asia analyst for the International Crisis Group, a global think-tank on conflict issues for three years and as a Jakarta-based journalist for international news organisations for a decade. Achmad's comments on Indonesia and Malaysia have appeared on CNBC, Bloomberg, Reuters, Wall Street Journal, Financial Times and the Straits Times. Achmad holds a Master of Arts degree in Global and Comparative Politics from Queen Mary University of London and a Bachelor of Social Sciences degree in International Relations from the University of Indonesia, where he joined the 1998 student movement that helped overthrow the Suharto authoritarian regime.
